

TU DUBLIN CONSERVATOIRE

DMus in Performance

The DMus in Performance programme is designed for outstanding performers, who wish to engage in doctoral-level research through performance. Based at the Conservatoire, which has a long tradition in the provision of performing arts education and artistic research, the DMus programme fosters artistic, intellectual and creative development within an integrated and structured research programme in music performance.

The Conservatoire is home to The Research Foundation for Music in Ireland (www.musicresearch.ie), which promotes the dynamic musical life of Ireland, manifested in performance, musicology, pedagogy, and composition. Given the centrality of music to Ireland's culture, the Research Foundation advances the study and performance of music in Ireland to national and international audiences, to the scholarly community and to the music industry.

DMus scholars also benefit from being part of TU Dublin's large research community through the Graduate Research School and collaborate with fellow artistic researchers at GradCAM: Graduate School for the Creative Arts and Media.

What will I study on the DMus programme?

Each scholar follows a research plan which integrates performance and practice-based research with outputs that include performances, lecture recitals, scholarly editions, archives, artistic compositions, recordings and multimedia, conference papers and a critical integrated thesis. The DMus programme ensures that graduates have the skills to excel at performance and research, and most importantly the combination of both – which is becoming increasingly attractive at Conservatoires across Europe and further afield.

Supervision

Artistic and academic supervision is central to the successful completion of the DMus programme. Supervisors play a key role in the research project, setting appropriate artistic and academic goals and mentoring the DMus scholars in their work.

Programme Duration

The maximum duration of study for a DMus scholar is 4 years full-time or 6 years part-time.

Who do I contact for more information?

Professor Cliona Doris
cliona.doris@tudublin.ie